THE ASIF OUTLAWS

'The Asif Outlaws'
Soulful Country Rock
Independent Release

They make a racket, this London lot. Mainly due to Jackie Taylor's blaring, rough and ready sax, often adding a brawny basis to Dave Holdstock and John Spence's guitars (see 'Down The River'). Lay on top of that Asif Ali's soulful pipes and this is an interesting brew. Akin to Sister Sparrow and Vintage Trouble, but with far more rock than soul, this album can really please, although it occasionally hangs around a little too long. Heaviest thing is 'She'll Eat Out Your Eyes' which is unafraid to hit a cowbell and filthy up the riff, but the brooding 'Sunlight' has a 70s ethos and gloriously unfolding guitar and sax solos. 'Imaginary Hero' just bangs away but remembers that a memorable riff can frequently be enhanced by a sax and 'Love Pump' seems to be exactly that, pulsating around a delayed shuffle. Centre point is the eleven-minute 'Commitment Phobic', which actually makes a claim for all those minutes by moving from a late 60s meander to a finger popping raucous riot.

The first review of The Asif Outlaws debut album was great with an 8/10 in Power-play Rock and Metal Magazine 198
The Asif Outlaws are a four piece Rock Band from Surrey. tasty guitar riffs, squealing saxophone, thundering rhythm section

The Asif Outlaws are no strangers to the Scream Lounge, or indeed Croydon. As regulars on the circuit there's a confidence about them that is given credence by their obvious abilities. Frontman Asif Ali knows every inch of his Les Paul and uses them all. Resplendent in his leather, straight from the 'Rock Trouser Museum', he has a swagger about him and a knowing gleam in his eye. His unlikely partner in pose is Dave Holdstock, whose moptop hair and casual attitude to stage wear belie a ferocious approach to his bass playing, fingers flying across the frets, body almost constantly in motion. Jackie, on saxophone, eschews histrionics for getting the job done, understated but professional, they're good. Oh, they're very good.
